shall find Lenora."
Chaig shook his head. A very weak shille of triumph flickered for a moment at the corners of his hipa.
Your torture chambler trick won't work on me!" he exclaimed. "You can never."
The whole gamut of emotions seemed abready to have spent themselves in the manis face, but at that moment there was a new element, an element of terrified curiosity in the expression of his eyes as he stared toward the door.
"Is this another trick of yours?" he muttered.
Quest, too, turned his head and sprang instantly to his feet. From Quest, too, turned his head and sprang instantly to his feet. From underneath the door came a little puff of smoke. There was a quest sense of heat of which both men were simultaneously conscious. Down in the street arose a chorus of warning shouts, increasing momentarily in volume. Quest three open the door and closed it again at once.

"The place is on fire," he announced briefly. "Pull yourself together, man. We shall have all we can do to get out of this."

Craig turned to the door, but staggered back almost immediately.

"The stairs are going!" he shricked.

"It is the kitchen that is on fire. We are cut off. We cannot get down!"

Quest was on his hands and knees, fumbling under his trucklebed. He rumbling under his trucklebed. He pulled out a crude form of fire ascape, a rough sort of cradie with a rope attached.

"Know how to use this?" he asked Craig quickly. "Here, catch hold. Put your arms inside this strap."

"You are going to send me down first?" Craig exciaimed incredulously. Quest smiled. Then he drew the rope round the table.

"You would like to have a chance of cutting the rope, wouldn't you, when I was half way down?" he asked grimly. "Now, then, don't waste time. Get on to the window sill. Don't brake too much. Off you go!"

Yard by yard, swinging a little in the air, Craig made his descent. When he arrived in the street there were a hundred willing hands to release him. Quest drew up the rope quickly, warned by a roar of anxious voices. The walls of the room were crumbling. Volumes of smoke were now pouring in underneath the door and through the yawning fissures of the wall. Little tongues of flame were leaping out dangerously close to the spot where he must pass. He let fall the slack of the rope and leaned from the window to watch it anxiously. Then he commenced to descend, letting himself down hand over hand, always with one eye upon that length of rope that swung below. Suddenly, as he reached the second floor, a little cry from the crowd warned him of what had happened. Tongues of flame curling out from the blazing building had caught the rope, which was being burned through not a dozen feet sway from him. He descended a little further and ransed in mid-air.

A shout from the crowd reached him.

"The cables! Try the cables!"

He glanced round. Seven or eight him.

"The cablest Try the cablest"
He gianced round. Seven or eight feet away, and almost level with him, was a double row of telegraph wires. Almost as he saw them the rope below him burned through and fell to the ground. He swung a little toward the side of the house, pushed himself vigorously away from it with his feet, and at the furthest point of the outward awing jumped.

"I Did Not Know That There Was Such Fine Millinery at $15 to $28 in New York!"

Said the Editor of one of the two great Fashion Magazines of America.

When viewing our Fashion Exhibition "La Promenade des Toilettes" last week, this editor was particularly en-thusiastic about our Hats. Of course, this editor, who is convergent with every new mode of Paris, quickly recognized that we had the distinguished models of all the famous French modistes, but was especially impressed with our own exclusive models and our reproductions of Paris hats.
